In the wake of the tragedy, two major inquiries were conducted: the British Inquiry and the American Inquiry. These investigations aimed to determine the causes of the sinking and make recommendations to prevent future disasters.

The report from the British Inquiry, known as the "Report Into The Loss Of The SS Titanic," is a comprehensive and detailed account of the events leading up to and following the sinking.

The Report

The report is divided into several sections, each covering a different aspect of the disaster.

Section 1: The Voyage

This section provides a detailed account of the Titanic's voyage, from its departure from Southampton to its collision with the iceberg.

The report includes eyewitness accounts from passengers and crew members, as well as technical data on the ship's design and construction.

Section 2: The Collision

This section examines the circumstances of the collision between the Titanic and the iceberg.

The report includes a detailed analysis of the iceberg's size, shape, and location.

Section 3: The Sinking

This section describes the events that followed the collision, including the flooding of the Titanic's compartments and the evacuation of passengers and crew.

The report includes eyewitness accounts from survivors, as well as technical data on the ship's structural damage.

Section 4: The Aftermath

This section examines the aftermath of the sinking, including the rescue efforts, the recovery of bodies, and the public outcry.

The report includes recommendations for improvements to maritime safety, including the establishment of the International Ice Patrol.
