The Mongol Empire was the largest contiguous land empire in history, stretching from the Pacific Ocean to the Adriatic Sea. The Mongols were a nomadic people who were skilled horsemen and archers. They were also ruthless warriors who conquered vast territories in a relatively short period of time.

The Mongol invasions of Europe began in 1221 when Genghis Khan led his army into Russia. The Mongols quickly defeated the Russian forces and went on to conquer Poland, Hungary, and Bohemia. In 1241, the Mongols invaded Germany, but they were defeated by the German forces at the Battle of Legnica.

The Mongol invasions of the Middle East began in 1256 when Hulagu Khan led his army into Persia. The Mongols quickly conquered Persia and went on to conquer Iraq, Syria, and Palestine. In 1258, the Mongols sacked Baghdad, the capital of the Abbasid Caliphate.

The Mongol invasions of Asia began in 1219 when Genghis Khan led his army into China. The Mongols quickly conquered northern China and went on to conquer Korea and Vietnam. In 1279, the Mongols completed their conquest of China with the defeat of the Song Dynasty.

The Mongol Empire had a profound impact on the West. The Mongol invasions led to the collapse of the Abbasid Caliphate and the decline of the Byzantine Empire. The Mongols also introduced new technologies and ideas to the West, such as gunpowder and the printing press.
