A Window into the Shadows

Through meticulous archival research and immersive storytelling, Ruggiero transports readers to the vibrant streets and hidden corners of Peruvian cities during a century of profound social, economic, and political transformation. She uncovers the lives of the women and men involved in prostitution, exploring their motivations, experiences, and the myriad ways in which they navigated the stigma and regulation that shaped their existence.

Sex, Power, and Society

"History of Prostitution in Peru 1850s-1950s" goes beyond mere documentation of the sex trade. Ruggiero delves into the intricate interplay between prostitution and the broader social, cultural, and economic forces that influenced it. She examines the role of prostitution in shaping gender relations, the regulation of sexuality, and the construction of class and racial identities.

Contested Terrain: Policing and Patronage

Ruggiero unveils the complex relationship between prostitution and the state. She traces the evolution of policies and laws that aimed to control and regulate the sex trade, while also revealing the ways in which prostitution thrived despite or even because of these efforts. The book explores the interplay between policing and patronage, as well as the influence of powerful individuals and institutions on the lives of sex workers.

Voices from the Margins

What sets "History of Prostitution in Peru 1850s-1950s" apart is its unwavering commitment to giving voice to the individuals who lived and worked in the sex trade. Ruggiero draws on a rich tapestry of sources, including personal testimonies, police records, and literary accounts, to provide a nuanced and empathetic account of the lives of sex workers.
